

Iguazu Falls

By Matthieu

Photos speak louder than words.

The Argentinian side of the falls is really great, you get what you pay for. It's just "Wow", we'd been warned, and even with that, we were impressed. In the end, we stayed 7 hours in the park under a blazing sun, and there are a few showers and taps to cool off and refill bottles.

Iguazu Falls seen from the Argentine side

Lots of butterflies to see.

And an iguana basking in the sun. ☐

The view from the Brazilian side.

In our opinion, the Brazilian side is much less attractive than its neighbor. The Argentinian side of the falls is really great, you get what you pay for. After that, we really feel that they want to make the park as profitable as possible, so we take a bus to the falls and stop in front of all the stops for paid outings (boats, bikes, kayaks, etc.). But the view when you arrive is just amazing, you can see all the falls in one panorama and it's well worth it. In our opinion, the Brazilian side is far less attractive than its neighbor.
